Telephone lines need an input impedance and an output impedance of 600 ohms for impedance matching (power matching).. implies also that the load impedance is unspecified, or unterminated and is likely to be high.. If the reverse conversion dBu, or dBV to volts is needed, go to the converter at the bottom.. In sound engineering there is no Power matching or Impedance matching Enter two values, the third value will be calculated.

A logarithmic ratio with a reference power of P 0 = 1 000 milliwatt $\hat{=}$ 0 dBm.. The pseudo unit "dBm" is not used in audio and in sound recording With the known impedance value you can convert voltage V to level dBm (power) and vice versa. Often an impedance of 600 ohms or 50 ohms is assumed For radio frequency systems (RF), impedance matching or power matching is absolutely essential..
